About:

Making sure the end result has integrity while being centered around your vision is my number one priority. Every person/company has a unique selling point and bringing that out is what really matters. Using my arsenal of creativity and technology It's my mission to create something compelling that tells your story.

I began my career when I was just 11 years old by learning basic photo editing. These days I'm still learning new software and sharpening my skills. I have a personal belief that curiosity leads to excellence.

Elevator Pitch:

To me Graphic Design isn't about just making things look pretty. Now let me explain. The first thing on a Graphic Designers mind should be about solving the problem. I have to gain a complete understanding about the company/person/product and know what makes it's selling point unique so that I can use the language of visual arts to tie all of that onto a message.

The reason I recently studied Hub-Spot's inbound marketing, sales, content marketing, emails, and web was to understand the goals along with the strategy attached to those goals. Now that I know the reasons I can apply that knowledge on my end and totally nail it instead of potentially confusing the message by removing visual integrity.
